Interview

So my English college professor assigned my class an interview assignment in which he chooses who we get to interview. I got lucky and got a nice female whose name was Abigail Flores. Before we did the interview the professor provided an example of an interview with famous singer Chris Cornell. It showed me examples of what to do and what I shouldn't do in an interview. The interview that was assigned consisted of 8-10 questions and we had to identify what was our peer's subculture and ask other questions related to their subculture. Before I did the interview I had came late that day since I went to work with my dad and so we had to reschedule to an hour later. I'm not going to lie I was a bit nervous in the beginning because I didn't know what to expect.

Abigail was wearing a white shirt and had makeup on and so she asked me 8 questions and they made me critically think and dig deep into my response. Eventually, it was my turn to ask the questions and the mood was very calm and had a good vibe because I felt more relaxed after knowing she was pretty chill and had great questions that made me express myself which I enjoyed. The first question that was asked was what she liked to do in her spare time. She replied by saying "I used bullet Journaling making spreads out of inspirations and journaling about my day.." She kept gazing up with her glasses whenever she had to pause and think which I saw her do constantly which reminded me of myself I tend to look up when I'm trying to think. Then after this, I asked what were her passions in life? I made sure and tried to speak with a friendly tone because I didn't want to speak with a monotone voice and even tried to throw a joke in there. Abigail responded saying, "My passion is helping people". I told Abigail that I was a slow typer so I couldn't capture all that she said for the third question about what social media she used and why but she said something along the lines of that she used Instagram the most because she was able to chat with her friends there. After her response, I saw a way to connect with her since I also like using Instagram and awkwardly asked if she would like to follow me and I would follow her back. Aside from my awkwardness Abigail seemed really fine and immediately agreed with the idea.

My next question was about her motivations in life. She paused and gazed up once again and said "My parents motivate me the most because they have been through a lot and didn't have an education." After she finished her response I told her that I had agreed with her because just like her my parents also motivate me everyday just seeing their struggle and what they did to help me encourages me and motivates me in life.
